MANY BELIEVE IN CHARMS

Soldiers of the Kaiser's Army Put Their Faith in All Kinds of Peculiar Charms.

The soldiers of the Kaiser are very superstitious, from the men in the ranks up to the crown prince. The crown prince carries a horseshoe with him on all his auto trips, and the crown prince spends most of the day in his auto. The horseshoe is attached to one of the doors of the car and when being photographed in his auto, the prince always insists on the photographer "taking" the side of the car with the horseshoe.

The soldiers of Wuerttemberg pin their faith upon a little bag containing the dry pollen of flowers, which, they believe, has the power of warding off the bullets.

The Saxons saw into the lining of their waistcoats the wings of a bat, and think themselves to be invincible. The Bavarians hold on tenaciously to a little more bizarre custom. Before going into battle each soldier finds a birch tree, cuts his skin, and lets a few drops of blood fall upon the tree. This ceremony, they assert, assures recovery, no matter what the nature of the wound, when the leaves begin to grow again.

Style.
The secret of style is to write like a human being.—Walter Dagehot: Life and Works.

FACTS ABOUT WORKING DAY

During the Last Twenty-five Years It Has Only Been Shortened an Hour.

We are far better off than we were fifty or seventy years ago, the New York Republic observes. At the beginning of the century, the wage earner labored from sun to sun, and later, when expensive machinery and artificial light were introduced into the factories, the working day was extended far into the night. In 1840 American cotton operatives worked 14 hours per day, and as late as 1852 13 hours, while today the average working day in the mills is under ten hours. The hours of labor of farm laborers, except in harvest times, seem to have diminished, and in a considerable number of occupations, notably in the building trades, an eight hour day has been introduced. In other occupations, affecting the health of the workers or in which women and children are largely employed, a shorter working day has been secured by legislation. But this progress, though considerable, is not nearly so great as is generally supposed. The ten hour day still prevails in most industries, while the 11 and 12 hour day is far from being extinct. During the ten years from 1891 to 1901, the average working day fell only a quarter of an hour. In the last 25 years, less than one hour has been taken from the hours of daily labor.

Peary Says He Knows.

Lord Rayleigh is one of the most interesting members of the British peerage.

His lordship is a noted scientist, and it was for his scientific work that he received the high honor of the Order of Merit. Although Lord Rayleigh is a profound scholar, he has a humorous side to his nature, and he once played a neat little joke on a learned friend with whom he had been discussing some deep subjects.

"What is the difference between the north and south poles?" he asked very gravely.

His lordship's friend thought he had a new scientific problem to grapple with and brought all the weight of his brain to bear upon the question. "I really must give it up," he said at last.

"The answer is simple enough," replied Lord Rayleigh with a smile, "there is all the difference in the world."

Military Wedding Cake.

The very latest British war fashion is the military wedding cake. So largely has this become a feature of weddings associated with military and naval men that the wholesale manufacturers are specializing in toy ornaments of a warlike character to decorate the cakes.

These are mostly ornamental cannon guns and rifles, with battleships for naval men and very well executed models of aeroplanes for bridegrooms connected with the flying corps. Armored cars and flags of all nations also figure. Sugared Cupids and harps are at a discount.
